Dear Mr. Teller,

In answer to your last email from Saturday, 14th of April, I'm sending you my careful thoughts without prejudice.

In reference to your email, I would like to draw your attention to the copyright action attached to your last email.

Which became a public document from the moment it was filed in court.

You were right when you wrote in your last email that an unpleasant process begins.

We both have a lot more to lose than gain by further continuing with this situation, although I have nothing further to lose ... certainly not my reputation.

In answer to your request to make you a proposal, I dare not to do one, as I do not want to antagonize you further.

First I need to know from you what you mean with publishing my picture (exhibit 3 page 2 and 4) right under the toolbar from website links that I do not visit.

If the whole world can see my name in the same picture with 'man-tube', Corbin, CF Select, I really feel compromised by this.

I'm a devout and religious man and not used to being associated with these sites!

This is ruining my life and I ask you to reconsider your action against me and withdraw the complete lawsuit.

We can then focus on a solution between the two of us and resolve this in a 'private' and amicable agreement, outside the courtroom and the media.

Sincerely,

Gerard.

Dear Mr. Teller,

I hope everything is O.K. with you. Did you receive my last email ?

As you wrote "you're not intend to haggle further" I think it's time to respond to my last email from April 18th.

I have been contacted by reuters for comment but I wish to hear from you first as I would prefer not to defend myself in the press.

Please note that time is the essence... as I'm highly stressed and want to resolve this now!

Maybe it's time to drink this coffee you spoke about, sit down, just the two of us, no lawyers, no media, to focus on a solution.

They have great coffee in Madrid.

Sincerely,

Gerard.

Dear Mr. Teller,

On April 17th I've sent you my careful thoughts without prejudice and asked you to explain what you mean by publishing my picture (exhibit 3 page 2 and 4) right under the toolbar from website links that I do not visit. When the whole world can see my name in the same picture with 'man -tube', Corbin, CF Select, 2 Long,

I'm still waiting and hoping to hear some respect and good faith in your answer.

Regards,

Gerard

Dear Gerard,

There is no injury to you and no actionable bases for objecting to documents filed with the United States Federal Court.

The screen shot was not made by you. It cannot be reasonably inferred that the sites you allude to are sites associated with you.

With all due respect, Gerard, you seem to be groping desperately for some shred of defense to your infringement and threat of future infringement.

If you have realistic, good-faith proposals to offer for settling this matter out of court, please make them.

Otherwise, please stop wasting my time.

Respectfully,

TELLER
